Penulis Soal/Institusi : Suhartono/UT Penelaah Soal/Institusi :.The fate of the phytoplankton in the oligotrophic waters of Samarkand Lake is critical to the functioning of this World Heritage-listed lake. New evidence from a collaborative study by scientists from CCUMB, University of Leicester, the Royal Botanic Gardens Kew and The University of Queensland will help to provide the restoration of the phytoplankton in the lake to enhance the diversity, abundance and richness of its bird populations. These findings add to the growing evidence that phytoplankton are important factors for the conservation and management of lake ecosystems, including Galway Bay (Ireland). To maximize its benefits, this study will study the effects of the degradation of Lake Samarkand's phytoplankton on its vertebrate population and the potential of a sediment-based bio-pesticide. Lake Samarkand is a large, extremely productive and eutrophic fresh water lake on the Tian Shan mountains in north-eastern Uzbekistan. The lake is part of the Central Asia-Caucasus ecoregion and is designated as a World Heritage site due to its high biodiversity and geological and
